

Clean, green and mighty keen

STUDENTS at James Sheahan Catholic High School joined their counterparts across the nation last week to participate in a fundraising event that helps clean up and green up the environment.

The school's environment group was keen to participate in Green Up Clean Up with the aim of helping to improve the school's awareness of environmental issues.

The school set aside a day to take part and at the same time raise funds through members of the group seeking sponsorship to work on the day.

Year 10 students helped the group by planting seeds to propagate native trees or watering, and mulching around existing trees to help preserve and generate growth of those trees which were planted at the school earlier this year.

Money raised will go towards environmental resources.

"We are also hoping to set up a worm farm if we are able to generate sufficient funds," said teacher involved with the project Sue Humphrys.

CONTRIBUTING TO ENVIRONMENT: James Sheahan Catholic High School's Grace Garretty took part in the recent Green Up Clean Up day. Photo STEVE GOSCH

1119sggreen